DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Evesham Stable House is a one and a half story stuccoed building with a "T" shaped floor plan. The high gabled, slate shingled roof is detailed with a brick chimney and two shed dormers. The windows contained within the dormers are double hung with 1/1 lights and plain surrounds. The projecting verges and eaves of the roof trim are plain. Three connected lattice-work case windows are located in the first story left. In the second story of the central projecting gable end are two double hung windows with 6/6 lights and plain surrounds. Three connected windows of the first story are similarly designed. In the left side wall of this gabled projection is a main entrance with an elliptically arched fan transom and side panels. Two large windows are located in the first story right.

These windows are cross divided into four sections, each section containing nine lights. All of the windows appear to have been recently encased with some type of storm windows.

The Evesham Stable House is located on an otherwise vacant large parcel between Dartmouth Road and Northern Parkway.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Evesham Stable House is a relic of the Gilded Age of Govans when large estates of the very wealthy of Baltimore encompassed most of the surrounding countryside. This particular estate was owned by Reverdy Johnson, one of Baltimore's most representative men.

Reverdy Johnson, son of Chancellor Johnson, was born in Annapolis on May 21, 1796. He was bred in the law. He was educated at St. John's College and taught law in his father's office until 1817 when he moved to Baltimore. His Baltimore home was among those handsome nineteenth century houses that were clustered around the Battle Monument on Calvert Street. Reverdy Johnson was the Attorney General of the United States in 1849, was a United States senator in 1863, was the American minister to England in 1868, and besides these received many other important appointments at the hands of his State and the Federal Government. On April 5, 1864 he delivered a speech in the United States Senate for the abolition of slavery.

"Evesham" was Mr. Johnson's summer estate which Betsy Patterson is said to have frequented. The estate house itself was destroyed by a fire only within the past generation.

The Stable House, now the only remaining relic of "Evesham", is presently located on a piece of ground where the proposed #750 school is to be built. Careful planning must seek to preserve and maintain this structure by integrating it into the proposed new use of this land.
